Background and Author of All in the Timing Play

All in the timing play was written by David Ives, a prominent contemporary American playwright renowned for his witty and linguistically inventive works. First premiered in the early 1990s, the play quickly garnered attention for its sharp humor and unique structural approach. Ives' background in both classical and modern literature influences his writing style, which often blends intellectual rigor with comedic timing.

The play consists of multiple short scenes or one-acts, each exploring different themes and comedic devices. Ives created all in the timing play to showcase the power of language and timing in producing humor, reflecting his belief that comedy relies heavily on precise delivery and rhythm. The play's success has made it a staple in educational theater programs and community productions, highlighting its accessibility and appeal.

Structure and Key Scenes

All in the timing play is composed of six short plays, each lasting approximately 10 to 15 minutes.

These scenes are self-contained but share a common thread of linguistic playfulness and timing-based humor. The structure allows directors and performers to choose individual scenes or present the entire series as a cohesive performance.

Overview of the Six One-Acts

The six one-acts included in all in the timing play are:

- Sure Thing – A scene exploring the nuances of conversation and choice through repeated attempts at initiating a relationship.
- The Philadelphia – A humorous take on linguistic misunderstandings involving a man and his girlfriend's pet hamster.
- English Made Simple – A dialogue that reveals how complex emotions can be simplified through language.
- Words, Words, Words – A satirical look at three monkeys attempting to write Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Philip Glass Buys a Loaf of Bread – A minimalist piece inspired by the repetitive style of composer Philip Glass.
- Variations on the Death of Trotsky – A darkly comedic take on the moments before Trotsky's death.

Significance of Each Scene

Each scene in all in the timing play serves a distinct purpose, demonstrating different facets of comedic timing and language play. For example, "Sure Thing" relies on timing to reset conversations and explore how small changes in dialogue affect outcomes, while "Words, Words, Words" uses absurdity and repetition to comment on creativity and randomness. This variety enriches the overall experience and highlights Ives' versatility as a playwright.

The Role of Timing in Comedy

Timing is a critical element in comedy, and all in the timing play exemplifies this principle through its precise pacing and rhythmic dialogue. The success of the humor depends not only on the text but on how actors deliver their lines and interact with pauses, beats, and interruptions.

Understanding Comic Timing

Comic timing involves controlling the speed and pause of dialogue to maximize humor. In all in the timing play, timing creates tension and release, allowing punchlines to land effectively. The interplay between characters often hinges on reacting at the right moment to produce laughter.

Techniques Used in All in the Timing Play

David Ives employs several techniques to emphasize timing:

- Repetition: Scenes like “Sure Thing” reset conversations with repeated lines, each time altering the outcome slightly.
- Interruptions: Characters often interrupt or correct each other, creating dynamic exchanges.
- Pauses and Beats: Strategic silences allow the audience to absorb humor and anticipate the next line.
- Pacing Variations: Rapid-fire exchanges contrast with slower, more deliberate moments for comedic effect.

Performance Tips for All in the Timing Play

Performing all in the timing play requires attention to the nuances of timing and delivery. Actors and directors must collaborate closely to bring out the humor embedded in the text. Understanding the rhythm of each scene is essential for a successful presentation.

Key Considerations for Actors

Actors should focus on:

- Mastering the script’s rhythm by rehearsing beats and pauses carefully.
- Reacting naturally to other characters’ lines to maintain fluidity.
- Emphasizing clarity in pronunciation to highlight wordplay and double meanings.
- Using physicality subtly to enhance comedic moments without overshadowing the dialogue.

Directorial Guidance

Directors should:

- Encourage experimentation during rehearsals to find the optimal pace for each scene.
- Work with actors on timing, especially in scenes with repetitive or interrupted dialogue.
- Focus on transitions between scenes to maintain audience engagement.
- Consider the play's minimalist staging to keep attention on performance and language.

Impact and Legacy of the Play

All in the timing play has had a lasting impact on contemporary theater, particularly in the realm of short comedic works. Its innovative use of timing and language has influenced playwrights and performers interested in exploring the mechanics of humor. The play is frequently studied in academic settings for its linguistic creativity and is a popular choice for theater festivals and competitions.

all in the timing play: All the World's a Stage David Henry Wilson, 1986-06-02 THE STORY: A group of Boys and Girls assemble, guided by the Boy and Girl Narrators, to choose the parts they will portray in the play about to be presented. They can be anything they want to be—a procedure which is objected to by the Interrupter, who breaks in on them. When he is overruled, however, he elects to be a gangster, and takes everyone's money. Soon the others, perhaps affected by his actions, begin to bicker and disagree, until the Producer's Son appears and implores them to stop.

But they are soon in open challenge, and it is decided that the Producer's Son, who stands in the way of their selfish interests, must be removed. He is roughly dragged off, but not before warning all the Boys and Girls that they must not allow the pressure of a few to destroy what is best for the many. After his departure, however, it is the worst, not the best, which emerges, and the Narrators are hard pressed to explain that only by allowing free choice could the Professor know who deserved credit for doing well. Then, quietly, the Producer's Son returns, to reassure them that as long as even one good actor remains on stage the play can be saved—no matter how hopeless it may seem. For the play is as long as the world, all of us are the actors and actresses, it is our play.
