Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1911 edition. Excerpt: ... JOHN HARTE MCGRAW, second governor of Washington after it became a state, was a native of Maine, having been born at Barker Plantation, in Penobscot County, October 4, 1850. A little more than two years after his birth his father was accidentally drowned, and his mother was left to provide for herself and three small children as she best could. In time she married again, and not finding life in the home of his stepfather very agreeable, the future governor, when fourteen years of age, left it and thenceforward made his own way in the world. He had attended such schools as there were at that time, during the winter months, with some regularity, but after leaving home his education was for the most part continued in the hard school of experience only. He worked at such employment as he could obtain, and finally became a clerk in a general merchandise store, of which he was made manager when only seventeen. He held that position four years, and then, in company with a brother, who was older, engaged in business on his own account. The undertaking was so far successful as to satisfy their expectations until the hard times which followed the failure of Jay Cooke and Company brought it to a disastrous close in the winter of 1875, an Excerpt: ... no longer suffer from the cold in winter, or from hunger in the seasons when fish and game, and the roots and berries which the earth produced in season, were not abundant. They were not unwilling to give up a large part of their land to secure this desired change, and were living in anticipation of the time when it would be made. Not a few of them were beginning to doubt that it would be made--they had been hearing about it for so long a time. The settlers were coming in ever increasing numbers; were choosing such land as pleased them, building their homes and otherwise improving it; living in increasing comfort from what they got out of it, and paying them nothing. There was increasing danger that they, or some of them, might begin to be troublesome on this account, and the settlers were growing more and more anxious to have settlement made with them, so that they might be sent to their reservations, where they would no longer be subjected to their importunities, and where police regulations for their control could be established and effectively maintained. By the terms of the Organic act, the governor was also charged with the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs, and for the service to be rendered in that capacity he was to be paid an annual salary equal to his salary as governor, which was $1,500, showing that in the estimation of Congress and the president, his duties and responsibilities as superintendent would be quite as important as in his capacity as governor, as indeed they were to be. During the session of Congress recently closed, an appropriation had been made for making the necessary treaties, and to make such payments to the tribes treated with as should be required, and he was now authorized to proceed with the...

washington state history textbooks: History of the State of Washington (Classic Reprint) Edmond S. Meany, 2015-07-14 Excerpt from History of the State of Washington The history of the State of Washington has been published occasionally in the form of expensive subscription volumes, augmented by the aid extended from generous individuals who were persuaded to have their biographies and portraits added for a monetary consideration. This book is written in the belief that the time has now come when there is a distinct use for a compact record in one volume, free from money-enticing addenda and depending for success upon its own merits. It is intended primarily for the general reader, but the frequent citation to sources will make it usable in such high schools and colleges as may need a text in this subject. Acknowledgments of assistance have been made in footnotes throughout the work. It should, however, be recorded here that the difficult task of preparing Chapter XXXI on Federal Activity in the State has been greatly facilitated by the aid of United States Senator Samuel H. Piles, the members of President Roosevelt's Cabinet, and their assistants. The greatest difficulty arose from the fact that much of the information sought had never been segregated as to States. It may transpire that that chapter will blaze the way for a new appraisal of the increasing cooperation by the American nation with the individual States. Governor Albert E. Mead has kindly permitted the use of the portraits of Territorial and State governors collected by him for the State, and George H. Himes, Assistant Secretary of the Oregon Historical Society, furnished a number of the other illustrations. The efficient and tireless help of Charles W. Smith, Assistant Librarian of the University of Washington, is also acknowledged with gratitude. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. washington state history textbooks: The New Politics of the Textbook Heather Hickman, Brad J. Porfilio, 2012-10-29 In an era when corporate and political leaders are using their power to control every aspect of the schooling process in North America, there has been surprisingly little research on the impact of textbook content on students. The contributors of this volume and its partner (The New Politics of the Textbook: Problematizing the Portrayal of Marginalized Groups in Textbooks) guide educators, school administrators, academics, and other concerned citizens to unpack the political, social, and cultural influences inherent in the textbooks of core content areas such as math, science, English, and social science. They urge readers to reconsider the role textbooks play in the creation of students' political, social, and moral development and in perpetuating asymmetrical social and economic relationships, where social actors are bestowed unearned privileges and entitlements based upon their race, gender, sexuality, class, religion and linguistic background. Finally, they suggest ways to resist the hegemony of those texts through critical analyses, critical questioning, and critical pedagogies.

washington state history textbooks: Nationalism and History Education Rachel Hutchins, 2016-02-26 History education, by nature, transmits an 'official' version of national identity. National identity is not a fixed entity, and controversy over history teaching is an essential part of the process of redefining and regenerating the nation. France and the United States have in particular experienced demographic and cultural shifts since the 1960s that have resulted in intense debates over national identity. This volume examines how each country's national history is represented in primary schools' social studies textbooks and curricula, and how they handle contemporary issues of ethnicity, diversity, gender, socio-economic inequality, and patriotism. By analyzing each country separately and comparatively, it demonstrates how various groups (including academics, politicians and citizen activists) have influenced education, and how the process of writing and rewriting history perpetuates a nation. Drawing on empirical studies of the United States and France, this volume provides insight into broader nationalist processes and instructive principles for similar countries in the modern world.

Excerpt: ... f I DEGREESHE missionaries on the upper Columbia--at I Wailatpu, Lapwai and Tshimakain--had taken B no part in forming the provisional government. Their situation was too remote, and their members too few. Since Whitman's return with the emigrants of 1843, their affairs had been going much as before. Sometimes their work seemed to prosper, and they took new courage and hope; again there would be reverses, and they would seem to lose more than they had gained. During the years 1845-6 and '47, their letters to the general secretary were particularly discouraging. Spalding had contrived to get a printing press and some type from the Hawaiian Islands in 1839, an(DEGREES, w'tri tne ne'P of Edwin O. Hall, a printer from the mission at Honolulu, did the first printing ever done in Oregon or on the coast. Several elementary books for use in the mission schools were printed, some of them in the Nez Perce and Flathead languages, and some in both the English and Indian languages. A small collection of hymns and, finally, part or all of the Gospels were translated and printed. The printing press has always been a most helpful civilizing agent, and this particular one probably did as much in its way as any that has ever been made. The Nez Percés and their immediate neighbors were, for a time at least, more tractable than the Cayuses or Spokanes, or any of the tribes near the other missionary stations. Perhaps the work done by Spalding and his estimable wife and their associates was better calculated to impress their savage pupils. However this may be, the testimony of Wilkes, Dr. White and others is to the effect that more genuine progress was made by the Indians at this station than at any other. Eells and Walker and their wives were patient,
